SYNOPSIS:	Ramo, a courageous man from Adana, and his family have labored for cotton merchants for years. Now, they are forced into illicit activities for a powerful family that controls Çukurova. As Ramo describes, the only compensation they receive is akin to "bones given to dogs." The gang, notorious for diesel fuel smuggling, works under Cengiz, the dominant figure who reaps the majority of the profits. Determined to end this exploitation and ensure dignified treatment for his family, Ramo contemplates rebellion against the dominating family. However, the family council opposes this. Undeterred by their decision, Ramo resolves to take matters into his own hands. He defiantly raises riot flags at the earliest chance he gets, emulating his father's actions from the past. A deeply personal wound drives Ramo's fierce determination. His fight is not just against external foes but also against his own family, friends, and inner demons. Amid these challenges, he faces the trials of love as his sole romantic interest is Sibel, the daughter of his primary adversary. Sibel consistently challenges and pushes Ramo. Their intense love for each other is undeniable and hard to conceal. While Ramo steadily moves closer to his objectives despite numerous obstacles, an error made by his closest ally, Boz, disrupts all his plans.
