SYNOPSIS:	Aziz Payidar, heir to Antakya's premier carpet manufacturing family, drastically alters his life when he kills Monsieur Andre, a French delegate's son, to protect a village girl, Efnan, from assault. Subsequently disappearing for two years, he is presumed dead. Upon his return to a now French-occupied city, Aziz reopens his father's carpet atelier, aiming to uplift those seeking justice and fair wages. His former lover, Dilruba, however, is now betrothed to his cousin Adem, amidst familial threats. While unraveling the mystery of his father's death and facing retaliation from his resentful step-brother Kenan, Aziz and Efnan kindle a romance, inciting further complications with Dilruba. The antagonistic Monsieur Pierre, responsible for Aziz's father's death, and enamored with Efnan, enhances the strife, while Dilruba, unhappily wedded and expectant, makes a consequential decision. Despite hardships, Aziz and Efnan proceed to marry but face peril when Aziz takes a bullet intended for Father Leo. Concurrently, Pierre and Aziz's uncle Galip disrupt the local trade, causing additional strain on the newlyweds. In the political arena, as Pierre endeavours to manipulate parliamentary elections, Aziz backs his uncle Galip for candidacy, only to see him unjustly imprisoned. Aziz's eventual arrest and death sentence make him a symbol in the Independence War. Just as Aziz faces execution, Galip declares Hatay's independence, sparing Aziz. Together, Aziz and Efnan victoriously hoist the Turkish flag, as patriotic fervour ripples through the crowd, unified in singing the National Anthem.
