SYNOPSIS:	Ezgi and Memet, former lovers, reunite with a decision to lead a healthier life by adhering to the World Health Organization's recommendation of walking 10,000 steps every day. As they embark on daily walks together, past ties, memories, and various challenges in their current lives resurface. The story begins in the first episode with Ezgi advising Memet on how to succeed in his career and the revelation of Memet's true identity, leading to an exploration of both characters' personal and social struggles in subsequent episodes. The series humorously, sometimes dramatically, portrays the quirky, extraordinary, and emotional incidents that Ezgi and Memet experience during their walks, reflecting on their relationship and self-discovery. The second episode deals with the impact of Ezgi's foresight and its application in her life, the third with differing perspectives on mourning, the fourth with failed attempts at kindness, and the fifth with the conflict between truths and lies. Each episode delves into the complexities and challenges in Ezgi and Memet's relationship while shedding light on their personal growth. The later episodes of the series focus on relationships, societal expectations, and personal freedoms. The sixth episode discusses the challenges of therapy and personal change, the seventh addresses Mehmet's crisis over garlic, and the eighth explores communication issues. The ninth episode brings in a third person, adding complexity and emotional outcomes to the relationship, while the final episode narrates the profound impact of Ezgi's belief in Mehmet and the consequences of this decision on their lives. The series illustrates Ezgi and Memet's journey of not only physical but emotional steps together, offering them an opportunity to better understand themselves and each other.
